York, Pennsylvania

The first of the Old Time Inns or Taverns of York was opened by Adam Miller in 1741. It was followed by many others by such names as The Globe Inn and Stage Office — The Swan Tavern — The Sign of the Black Horse — The Sign of the Lamb — Black Bear Inn — The Golden Plough. The States Union was built in 1820. Before the time of the railroads, the farmers from a distance took their grain and produce to Philadelphia and Baltimore in covered wagons. On their return trips they brought goods and merchandise which were later conveyed westward to waiting merchants. Each wagoner had his own bed or "bunk" with him on these travels. In winter, he would spread his bunk on the floor of the tavern where he stopped because the inn was frequently filled up with lodgers.

MEMO FROM: Marcia

FRET-SAWED ELEGANCIES UP-TO-DATE: Commenting on the story concerned with fret work (Spinning Wheel, June '53), George F. Wild, son of William J. Wild whose contribution to fret saw production was discussed, writes: "Like Ivory Soap, the article was 99 44/100ths percent correct. However, Miller Falls, Co., of Greenfield, Mass., sold only their Fret Saw department to H. L. Wild in 1913, not the entire works." He adds that many of the original designs for fret work are still being sold by his company, though they stopped making the mechanical clocks mentioned in the article, in 1927. His business stationery, which we imagine closely resembles that used by his father before him, lists his company as "publishers of designs for scroll work, dealers in foreign and domestic woods and veneers, mouldings, inlays, brass goods and all supplies for professional and amateur wood workers—75 years of continuous service".

Wild-designed mechanical fret-sawed piece. Coney Island Horse Race, or Merry-go-round. Horses and riders of papier-mache ($1 each), race starters (50¢ each), and machinery costing from $15 to $20 originally. Four to six tunes played with drop-nickel-in-slot attachment.

FOLK ART MUSEUM: The City of Santa Fe, New Mexico, has just dedicated its new Museum of International Folk Art. It's a branch of the state-supported, state-operated Museum of New Mexico, and was built to house the folk art collection of Miss Florence Dibell Bartlett of Chicago. Miss Bartlett also financed the building of the Museum itself and the cost of installing the exhibits. Most modern display techniques are used to simplify the problem of preservation and maintenance —artificial lighting throughout, air conditioning, humidity control and electronic dust removal systems. Miss Bartlett's collection has been augmented with gifts from foreign nations, institutions and private individuals, and consists chiefly of costumes, textiles, household objects and a variety of decorated items of folk origin. Long range plans call for a collection of peasant houses from various foreign countries to be erected on the Museum grounds—maybe not so distant at that, for three such houses have already been acquired.

THE MAN BEHIND THE PENDULUM: Christian Huygens (1620-1695) the Dutch mathematician, physicist and astronomer, is generally considered the first to use the pendulum to regulate the movement of clocks. His was the earliest patent of

Doll Houses

The World of Antiques in Miniature

By Flora Gill Jacobs

Bliss Manufacturing Company's "gay nineties" doll house; author's collection.

ANYONE in the market for a small, select way to collect a little of everything, might consider the doll house.

Those of us who cannot bear to draw the line at a cupboardful of goblets or buttons or spoons, but feel impelled to surround ourselves with everything antique that engages our fancy, can do no better than to invade the doll house realm. There is almost nothing to be found in full-size in an antiques shop which, granted a pleasant amount of prowling, is not also to be found in miniature.

Besides, the contents of an eight-room (doll) house can be stored in a bureau drawer. This alone is probably some sort of advantage!

Since the process of miniature household reproduction has been going on for at least four hundred years, the most elderly examples are to be found in museums where elegant specimens represent customs as well as the furnishings of various countries and eras.

For moderate collectors (if there are any moderate collectors), doll housing items of the last century or so are still to be found in the antiques market. They are not in plentiful supply, for even yesterday's children, who reportedly were not as hard on their toys as today's, tended to smash their little treasures. But doll house items appear often enough to keep the diligent searcher from becoming cranky, and seldom enough to prevent said searcher from going broke.

About The Author: Mrs. Jacobs, the author of A History of Doll Houses published in 1953 by Scribners, was born in Washington, D. C. and attended George Washington University there. She is a former reporter for the Washington Post and wife of an attorney with the Department of Justice. She has researched the subject of doll houses both here and abroad and so recognized was her recently published book it is being re-published in Britain in the early spring of 1954.

Those who seek out the houses as well as their contents add architectural awareness to their collecting scheme. In this writer's collection are four doll houses, the most impressive of which is a grand affair believed to be a model of a South Jersey house of about 1850. (see illus.) One of the fanciest American examples we have seen, this one is practically a study in windows. There are bays and hinged casements, stained glass windows and peaked dormers, the latter perched upon a convex mansard roof. Friezes and cornices embellish the "sandstone" exterior. Inside there are such wonders as hand-carved "panelled" doors, and ceilings with designs painted on them.

A considerably more modest house is the one manufactured by R. Bliss Manufacturing Co. in 1895. (see illus.) This is a mere three-room affair, but the lithographed gingerbread in combination with porches and gables and eaves is a highly-detailed indication of the sort of residences which lined Main Street in the just as highly-detailed year.

The interiors can do no less in terms of verisimilitude, and they don't fail us. In addition to furniture with marble tops and chandeliers with blown bristol globes, there are wall telephones which ring when cranked and lamps which may be lighted if one is brave with (miniature) kerosene. Furniture styles are similarly faithful to actuality. One French Empire drawing-room set (see illus.) not

The Amazing Story of Henry Lewis and his 80 Views of the Valley of the Mississippi, 1854-1857

HENRY LEWIS, born at Scarborough, Kent, England, 1819, migrated to the United States in 1836 and became a stage carpenter at the Ben De Bar Opera House, Saint Louis, Missouri. While here, as a painter of scenery, he broached the idea of a panorama of the Mississippi to Banvard who, omitting Lewis from his plan, produced a 440 yard long picture by which he earned fame and fortune in its exhibition. Stockwell next produced a panorama 625 yards long but neither of these, successful though they were, fulfilled Lewis' idea. When he finally undertook his gigantic scheme, he did it alone, working from a house boat. His grandiose panorama, completed in 1849, was a continuous picture in two parts, one, displaying the River from Saint Anthony's Fall to Saint Louis, was 825 yards long; the other, portraying the River from Saint Louis to New Orleans was 500 yards long. A total of 1325 yards, or 435 yards short of a full mile. This enormous canvas was 12 feet high! When Lewis began exhibiting this gigantic picture in his adopted Country, his success in large cities prompted him to take it to England and then to Continental Europe. He did very well. So well in fact that he settled down at Dusseldorf, Germany, to study art and never again returned to the U.S.A. He lived at Dusseldorf until 1904.

While in this cultured German city he reviewed the original sketches for his Panorama, and sold the idea of publishing a view book of the Mississippi to Arntz & Company. They titled the work Das Illustrirte Mississippithal (The Illustrated Mississippi Valley).

The text was written by George B. Douglass, in English, and translated into German. The idea, of course, was first to sell the book to thousands of Germans who were ready to immigrate to America, after the political revolution of 1848. Shortly after completion of the work—and perhaps because of it—the publishers failed. Lempert, of Bonn, procured the books in sheets of text and prints. These they stored, made no effort to bind and sell, and finally sold the text sheets as waste paper and gave the views away as souvenirs to buyers of other books! Thus did a magnificent conception become a rarity by 1865. Less than two dozen copies are known in America—fortunately one of these is at present owned by Peter Decker, Antiquarian Bookseller of New York. He values his copy at $1,500.

In 1923, The Illustrirte was reprinted in facsimile, with all the plates in original coloring (Chromolitho-graphy) as No. 3 of Reprints of Rare Americana. J. Christian Bay wrote an introduction. Schmidt & Gunther of Leipsig and O. Lange of Florence, Italy, are cited as co-publishers. The prints, both original and reprint, are 7¼ x 10¼ sheet size, and in full color. Some have title in both English and German, some are in German only. Illinois and Iowa are spelled Jllinois, and Jiowa on some prints. Unfortunately the reprint carries only the Douglass text in German translation—which is a pity for, no matter how scholarly the translator may have been, English looses something when translated into a language less rich in idiom and loses more when translated back from another language, be it German, French or Italian.

Henry Lewis and his 80 Views of the Valley of the Mississippi (1854-1857)

The quality of the printing and the character of Lewis art requires no critical or other commentary at this time. What is important is the List of Views which, somehow, are represented in far more collections than copies of the book. As we have said, the inheritors of the Arntz work kept the plates and gave them away to buyers of other books, as premiums or souvenirs. It is not known how many of the 100,000 or more views were thus distributed but this much is sure, a goodly number of individual prints came to this country, framed and unframed, with upper class immigrants. Others came in as purchases by tourists in Germany. Prior to 1914, a now quite old antiquarian bookman asserts, you could still find these prints in and around Bonn, the University City.

So here (at the bottom of this page) is the list of views, all American, all of the Mississippi valley, all done by an artist while working at Saint Louis, and yet published in Germany as a grand guide for immigrants as well as scholars, only to have the publishers fail and the great mass of printed sheets become junk, and give-away trash!

The view of New Orleans is folding, measuring 19½ x 7½ inches. Many of the views show details of considerable significance in terms of architecture and other culture. For example, the view of the temple at Nauvoo shows the structure complete, with its belfry, surmounted with Angel Gabriel weathervane! We know this vane was made commercially from the 1860's but where did Joseph Smith get this "flying Angel" vane? Was it carried to Nauvoo from Ohio? Or New York? No matter how, we know it was there when Lewis made his drawing. All who profess a liking for the antiques of the great mid-west should make a determined effort to study this series of prints as so faithfully reproduced in the edition of 1923. This is your country, pictured regally, in full color.

Pellatt's Corinthian Cut Glass

Prices of Corinthian cut wares, by Pellatt were (in dollars, at London in 1825) $5 to $7.50 for water jugs. Milk jugs, $1 to $3. Tumblers, per dozen, $1 to $4.50. Water bottles, 75¢ to $2.50 each. Wine glasses, per dozen, $1.25 to $5. This page, in the original, is printed in blue ink, only slightly larger than here. Reproduction is therefore difficult. Shown courtesy of the Metropolitan Museum, New York, from the Landauer Collection.

Some notes on the simple, classic cut wares of Apsley Pellatt's Falcon Glass Works, London, England, c. 1816 to 1836, indicating that Pellatt's Corinthian is no doubt the prototype of the pattern glass called Ashburton Pressed.

HERE is a full page from the catalog of Apsley Pellatt who, even in America, is known as a pioneer in glass pressing. Yet this page pictures a generic type of cut glass known as "Corinthian" and so named because of its classic background, plus its popularity among the playboys of London who were generally known as Corinthians.

To be a Corinthian was to be on pleasure bent and nothing else. These men about town were boxers, fencers, golfers, cricketers, riders, racers, drinkers, eaters and, above all, lady killers. They kept elaborate bachelor establishments, patronized the prize ring, cockpit, bear pit, theatre, and especially the ladies of the theatre, or any other comely wench. They were eager buyers of everything new. Their cravats, waistcoats and pantaloons were creations. They spent money like water . . . and so, to be a Corinthian, was to be the best, or wealthiest at least, of men.

This classic pattern of glass found favor generally throughout England during the Regency and the reign of William IV. At first it was all cut, from heavy crystal blanks, but finally it was pressed. We call the pressed types the Ashburton Group. Maybe because there was a Corinthian Lord Ashburton, or something. But in England it was Corinthian cut, and each variant of cutting seems to have had its own name as, for example, Gothic, Lapidary, Octagon, Hexagon, Six Pillar, Etruscan, Hebe, Antique, Portland, Princess, York, Coburg, Goderich, Genteel and Tulip.

This page of glass from the Apsley Pellatt catalog pictures wares known to many of us in terms of pressed glass. Yet certain of our collectors will also recognize in it styles they now own as antiques in broad-cut glass. In this glass the cutting was seldom to achieve decoration, but to accentuate line and form. The cuts were in the nature of petals, flutes, swaths and, on shoulders, deep mitre cutting.

This is the prototype glass from which the Ashburton group of pressed wares derive and this, of course, is proof of the classic background of Ashburton, and its place in time. Since pressed glass in general, at first, was imitative of cutting, we can trace the movement progressively, as our pressed wares imitated new cutting techniques. This of course is a general trend, the exceptions being "Lacy Sandwich" originating in certain frost cutting, and in new pressed wares from Baccarat. At any rate, since Corinthian was the cutting par excellence of the first three decades of the 19th century it should be a pleasure to know that our Ashburton group of pressed wares is copied from that luxury cut glass.

Rebirth of a Log Cabin

By ADELAIDE BLANTON

(Photographs by the author)

The living room fireplace which runs through the center of the house and affords a dining room fireplace also on the other side.

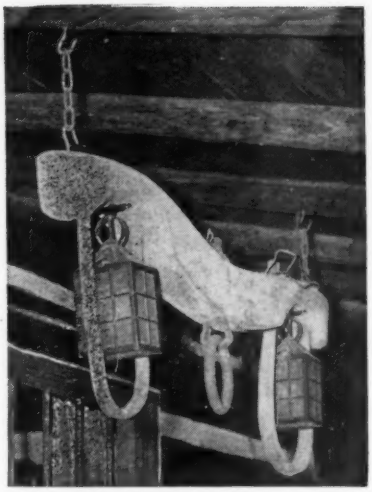
IT was the love of antiques that inspired Mr. and Mrs. S. V. Conner of New Albany, Indiana, to rebuild an old log house as a home and repository for their cherished possessions.

Searching through the hills of Southern Indiana for a suitable building, they discovered a large, ninety-nine year old log house at Starlight, Indiana. It was exactly what they wanted but—it was nine miles from Lost Knob, the knoll on which they wanted their home. Their love of antiques and admiration for log-cabin style homes overshadowed the great effort that would be involved in moving the cabin. It was carefully torn down, log by log. Each log was named and numbered and low trailer trucks hauled the massive hewn oak logs, a few at a time, over the nine miles of hills to Lost Knob.

After the logs were given four coats of creosote, each was placed in its original position. With a few minor exceptions, the log house became, not a replica of the old one, but the same log house in a new location. A few windows were enlarged and dormers added to both sides to give light and ventilation to the loft or balcony bedrooms. Real woodsmen were employed to erect the logs. They understood the art of handling and the proper placing of the interlocking corners. Cracks were chinked well with broken brickbats. Between the outside logs white Portland cement was used, but inside, the cracks between the logs were filled with fibre plaster.

A huge chimney in the center of the building serves two fireplaces, one opening into the living room, the other in the dining room. The stones for building the chimney and fireplaces were gathered from the hills. The living room fireplace is very massive, the opening for the firewood alone measuring fifty inches, accommodating a forty-four inch backlog. Built with a raise of about ten inches above the floor level, a low stone wall forms a seat or foot-warmer around the hearth.

Side view of log house showing greenhouse adjoining dining room.



Porch light consists of old ox yoke with electrified lanterns.

The eight rooms of this spacious log cabin abound in worthy antiques of all ages, though many pieces date back at least a full century. Two tables in the living room once belonged to the first Governor of Indiana, Governor Jennings. A pair of buggy wheels, each with sixteen spokes have been converted into chandeliers. Hanging from the living room rafters with an electric bulb placed at every other spoke, they do double duty by also furnishing light to the balcony bedrooms, accessible by open stairways at each end of the living room. Each stair step is built with a half-log resulting in a sturdy stairway with railings of plain logs and balusters of smaller ones.

The dining room table will seat sixteen people. It was originally used on an old steamboat from the Ohio river steamboat days. Not original to the architecture of the house is a small greenhouse which adjoins the dining room. It was Mrs. Conner's own idea and here she grows her plants both winter and summer.

The kitchen's size is about all in this room that remains original from the old log house. It is now strictly modernized.

The "dog run" of the old cabin did not daunt the Conners at all. They converted it into a breakfast room where a mixture of furniture reposes, lighted by an old hanging, steamboat lamp. And as for lighting, it seems that something old was wired for this purpose wherever needed around the house. A notable lamp conversion is the large wooden ox yoke holding two lanterns on the front porch ceiling. On either side of the entrance door are lamps from the early model autos.

The Conners have collected their antiques from all over the United States for this now one hundred and seventeen year old home. But perhaps the most engaging collectible of all is the home itself, moved tediously log-by-log and painstakingly reconstructed, only slightly remodeled from the way it originally stood.

An American Horse Painting and Woodcut

LADY SUFFOLK, a celebrated trotting mare of the 1840s * and early 1850s is here pictured, done in oils, by an unknown artist. The picture measures 22¼ x 26¼ inches and bears the label "Lady Suffolk, D. Bryant, Owner, Up". We are indebted to Kenneth Byard of Silver Mine, Conn., for this photograph of the original which is in his possession. This is what many people have been miscalling a "primitive" painting.

Since first making the statement that most so-called primitive genre, historic, horse and place views of the 19th century are copied from prints and other pictures, not a little difference of opinion has been voiced, although not in print. Of course the statement was not made with either hope, fear, or desire as a base. It was made after study of innumerable paintings and search for the prototype view, scene, or happening.

In this particular case, immediately upon seeing the picture, which was modestly priced at sixty-five dollars, I asked the dealer for a photo because, I felt sure, somewhere we had seen the prototype view. And sure enough, a two hour search brought it to light. "The Celebrated Race Horse, Lady Suffolk" here displayed as a woodcut is from Volume I of Gleason's Pictorial Drawing Room Companion. As a print it measures 9¼ x 6¼ inches. It bears no artist's name. The engraving on wood was done by "W & P".

In displaying both the painting and the woodcut print in the same size, certain comparison can be made. First, the woodcut displays the horse running on the track. The painting displays her running cross-country. The painting pictures the owner with a beard. In the woodcut he is clean shaved. In both pictures the horse holds substantially the same position. The artist who did the painting followed the woodcut of the hind quarters of the horse but he foreshortened the front and shows more of the horse's breast. The result is the painted horse doesn't look just right. The label on the painting spells the owner's name D. Bryant. The text with the Gleason woodcut reads: "We present our readers this week with an accurate portrait of the celebrated trotting mare, Lady Suffolk whose beauty and exploits have for years excited the admiration of not only patrons of the turf but of all lovers of that noble animal, the horse. The Lady Suffolk was purchased at the age of three or four years by David Bryan of New York in whose possession it remained until Mr. Bryan's decease, which occurred some months since, at New Orleans. Upon its return to New York, the horse was sold, for $3,200, to Snediker, Thorne & White of the Union Course, Long Island."

And now, a word about American Horse paintings and prints. These mementos of other, more leisurely days, are destined for a continuing rise in appreciation. In fact, one might predict popularity on a wide scale. Here we have a painting of considerable merit which is well worth every penny of its price, and a woodcut of the same subject which, hand colored, matted, and ready for the frame might be had for ten dollars. This state of affairs is a complete reversal of the sale, held a few years ago, at which paintings — originals — from which Currier and Ives prints were made, sold for less money than the prints!

 A rare hand colored folio lithograph of Lady Suffolk, with Albert Conklin up, pictures this famous mare from a portrait painted by Robert A. Clarke. This lithograph published by Lewis and Brown, N.Y., 1844 portrays the horse on the Beacon Course, Hoboken, N. J., 12th of July, 1843. The late H. T. Peters, in "America on Stone" calls this "the best under saddle lithograph of them all." This print, however, has no relationship to the painting or the woodcut here described and pictured.

Two early Staffordshire teapots in the Alexander collection.

Teapots Galore at Leesburg

By Penelope Osburn

(Photographs made especially for Spinning Wheel by Winslow Williams)

One puzzles over the original use of this four gallon Chinese import teapot with a pewter top. Was it simply an object of art or could it have been used for hot punch?

DURING Historic Garden Week in Virginia fine old china, Charles Dickens' dining table, and many other fine antiques will intrigue all who love the old and the beautiful.

In Leesburg, on April 24, 25 and 26, will be exhibited a fine collection of teapots that has never before been shown to Garden Week visitors.

Have you ever seen a teapot large enough to hold four gallons? A Chinese imported teapot of that size, with much the color and design of Lowestoft, finished with a pewter top, is one of the many owned by Mrs. J. R. H. Alexander, who lives on East Market Street in this charming Virginia town.

Several purposes have been suggested for this enormous pot's original use. Was it a theatrical prop, say for "Alice in Wonderland?" Or could it have stood in some famous old tea shop. Guests who see the collection can make their own speculation. Possibly someone can identify its origin. In contrast, the smallest teapot is barely half-an-inch high and was made by a veteran of World War I from a copper cent.

Mrs. Alexander's exceptional and interesting collection is displayed on shelves built so that they become part of the background of the room. Others are seen in a beautiful old china cupboard and in the top of a secretary desk. The collection started with several unusual teapots given by an elderly relative, and now number over 150. Some were inherited, others presents, and many were bought by the owner for their beauty and interest.

Tea was introduced into England from the Orient by early travelers and traders and in a very short time the habit of tea drinking spread and gained immense popularity. Up until this time ale was the common breakfast beverage as well as polite refreshment in the afternoon. Ale was drunk from mugs or tankards of silver or pewter. Either of these materials spoils the taste and fragrance of tea. In the Orient fine porcelain was used. Tea, at 16 to 50 shillings a pound in the 17th century in England, deserved the best in utensils and accessories, so the potters immediately turned to making the needed articles—cups for drinking and pots for brewing—and what was the fashion in England, in a short time became the style in the American Colonies. Here, too, potters began to make cups and pots. In both places the material and design of these articles varied with the individual potter.

Mrs. Alexander's collection contains many articles of great charm such as this doll tea set in brown and white Staffordshire. Fingers in background show relative size.

Mrs. Alexander's teapots include examples of the work of some of the outstanding makers of china and porcelain, Lowestoft, Wedgwood, Leeds, Castleford, Tucker, Royal Doulton and several Oriental examples, including Rose Medallion. There is Ironstone, both plain and decorated; blue, mulberry, green and brown Staffordshire; even the well-known Rebecca at the Well, made at Bennington, Vermont.

Teapots are charming for their own sake. Some, such as the one in this collection made by Castleford, also have historic backgrounds. This one was used in the White House during President Buchanan's administration, and is similar to a set used at Mount Vernon. Another, a Royal Doulton, bears this motto:

"Have more than thou showest,
Speak less than thou knowest."

One of the outstanding teapots, and a type not too commonly seen, is of black basalt. It is decorated with a raised figure, expressing grief, suggesting that it may have been made during a period of court mourning. Basalt ware was made by several well-known English potters, Wedgwood among them, and was very popular from about 1770.

Garden Week visitors will be delighted with the Staffordshire and Leeds Children's tea sets; the tea caddies; the tea cosy of Scotch plaid taffeta, made over 150 years ago; and finally, the three unusual tiffin baskets. These were used by the English, at home and in the Orient for traveling and picnics. Each contains a teapot and cup. One set is Rose Medallion.

The opportunity to see this unique collection is one that should not be missed by lovers of china.

The teapot collection is but one of the many interesting features to be found during Historic Garden Week, between April 24 and May 1, in Virginia. An especially prepared guide book has been prepared for those who may be interested in visiting the Old Dominion during this last week in April. It is available without cost from Travel Agencies, AAA offices, or direct from Historic Garden Week Headquarters, Room 3, Mezzanine, Hotel Jefferson, Richmond 19, Virginia.

The full quart Bailey Whisky flask, the Stoneware Cheese Box, the New York State glass container for Curtice Jam, and three Wheeling Glass containers for what few people realize was once a staple, Old Virginia Maple Syrup!

The "Enterprise" coffee mill is now apparently more esteemed as a lamp base than as a coffee mill. So if such items meet your fancy, open your mind to other . . . .

Grocery Store Antiques

FEW indeed are those among the collectors of today who have the correct concept of a Grocery Store of the 1890's. Many of them sold wines, whisky, cordials, ale, porter and beer. Imports were as wide and as varied as today. There were more types and kinds of tea and coffee than even our half century old collectors can imagine. That is why the old grocery store should be studied as a source of many of the antiques — or near antiques — one may find in the shops today. Take the tubular whisky bottle for example. It is a full quart bottle but, without its label you'd never in all the world imagine it as the glass container used from 1837 as the standard bottle for Bailey's Pure Rye. The Wheeling Glass factories supplied bottles for (should I say "hold your hats now?") —Virginia Maple Syrup. Without the labels you'd think these were wine decanters, ketchup bottles, or vinegar jugs!

It was the grocery trade that started the trend toward cash registers. Most groceries were one and two man stores and each clerk had to double in brass as cashier. The cash register solved the problem.

If you should find a round bentwood box and think it is a small cheese box, unstained by former use, and the mark of a rectangular label on the top, chances are it is an Exton cracker box. The makers, from 1847, used such a box for their delectable oyster crackers.

New York State glass containers were used by Curtice Brothers of Rochester to pack their famous jams, jellies and tomato ketchup. Millar, of Ingersoll, Canada, packed his cheese in a white stoneware jar made (so it is said) by Wedgwood! The "Enterprise" No. 8 Coffee Mill with its brass, eagle capped top is now apparently, more esteemed as a lamp base than as a coffee mill. Grocers were buying it direct from the makers, in the 1890's, at $16.00 net. On the other hand, a "Cretors" wagon is today prized as a sort of combined bar and antipasto server. Note the original as pictured. It was made by C. Cretors & Company of Chicago in the 1890's. This one is steam driven; the small engine turned the drum in which the peanuts were roasted, surmounted by a figure which went through all the motions of doing the work. Another stock item with grocers was the Givens "BOSS" candle lantern, made by Royall Givens of Corpus Christi, Texas.

In collecting the antiques of the grocery business one must remember that innumerable packaged items were sold from the mid 1840's. Among the items packaged were wet and dry fruits, nuts, olives, condiments, sauces, mushrooms, soaps, cheese, fresh grapes, tobacco, cigars, ginger beer, porter, mineral water, soda water, extracts, teas, coffees, herbs, table oils, and spices. Unfortunately (for we who are concerned with research) most of the packages were designed for secondary, long term use and all those which had paper labels survive only in their "bare" state. Many of the stoneware and earthenware containers have printed or incised identification that cannot be removed and so provide immediate clues to identification. But the bare containers must be researched by scanning every catalog and journal available in the hope of finding an illustration of the item with its original label.

This is the "Boss" candle lantern as patented and manufactured by Royall Givens, Corpus Christi, Texas. Patented Nov. 27, 1894.

Antiques of the cash register world: top, The Eureka Cash & Credit Register, made at Scranton, Pennsylvania. Below, The Standard Autographic Cash Register, made by the Morford Cash Register Co., Chicago. Both date from the mid 1890's.

On the other hand, the appurtenances of the grocers' trade — the japanned tea and coffee canisters, the coffee grinders, scales, pumps, sugar augers, scoops, measures, knives, slicers, cutters et cetera are not without their problems of identification. Most of the mill and machine makers cast their names and other information on the pieces, but woodenware is frequently unmarked and at times the purpose of an item is not obvious. The sugar auger was used also to loosen dried fruits from their boxes. Certain wood measures were only for dry groceries and others for wet goods.

This by no means exhausts the possibilities of collecting grocery store antiques. In fact, none of the advanced collectors whose purpose is the recreation of an old store can be said to have exhausted the possibilities. To those who really wish to pursue this subject, a study of the weekly and monthly journals of the Grocery Trade, wholesale and retail, is recommended. These, plus the catalogs of the makers of many of the items, offer what might be termed the possibility of conclusive research in the field. But after you know everything that was sold and used, the next task is to find surviving examples. So we say, here is almost endless opportunity if you respond at all to the idea of collecting grocery store antiques.

Some fine examples of hooked rugs in the author's home.

Hooking Rugs

Brings Beauty to the Home

By Nadine Mills Coleman

MOUNTAINS of wool thrums or strips of worn woolen materials, a dash of imagination, and ten willing fingers—these are the most needed ingredients if you would spread your floors with attractive hooked rugs. A hand-made rug is a lasting treasure—something to be handed down through generations—and is worthy of great care. Only the best material should go into the making of it.

If you have been caching worn garments and old blankets away in the attic against the day when you can get started on your rug-making, do check materials for moth damaged threads.

Or perhaps you prefer the convenience, economy, and longlasting qualities of wool thrums. These are yard lengths of discarded yarns which come from the looms of rug manufacturers. Thrums are smaller strands, however, than the regular rug yarns, and do not work satisfactorily in the push type of rug hooker. Best results are obtained with thrums by using a small crochet hook and working without a frame. An added advantage of hooking with thrums is that you need not clip your rug. One soon learns to pull the strands through evenly. Not only do you spare yourself hand-blistering work with scissors, but an unclipped, firmly packed rug will wear much longer.

Samples of thrums may be had by writing to any leading rug manufacturer, together with price listings.

An important step is the choosing of your pattern. Available are the ready-stamped ones, or you can design it yourself. You will add years of wear to your rug if you make it on a special weave material for hooking rugs rather than burlap. This heavy-corded open weave is available at department stores.

The richly colored samples will delight you, and half your fun will be in deciding between them. Keep in mind that soft, muted shades are easy to live with. If your walls are of mellow pine, give a thought to the warm, woodsy shades of forest green, nut-browns, accented with rose and blue and wine. The result—stunning floor coverings with character of their own; easy on the budget.

Fortunate you are if you have a room set apart for rug-making. Here you can have your thrums arranged in cartons or bushel baskets according to colors all within reach of hand. In such a room—together with a radio—you will spend many happy hooking hours.

You will work clumsily at first, but it soon becomes a mere twist of the wrist to catch the thrums and pull them through evenly. Too, you will find it more comfortable to hold your work in your lap as you work rather than raise aching arms to a frame.

Never hurry with your hooking or get impatient to see the finished results. Let it become a fascinating, leisurely hobby.

At our house it is an occasion when a newly-made hooked rug is "unveiled" or put down. And happiest of all is Prince, our Dalmatian, as he settles down on the rug for a nap.

London Furniture Makers 1660-1840

By Sir Ambrose Heal

Published by

B. T. Batsford, Ltd.
London, England

A "MUST" book, of course, is a book that a student just must have to complete his library—and his education. This work, just published by B. T. Batsford Ltd., of London, is a first book on the subject, listing 2,500 individuals and firms and portraying innumerable trade cards and bills of certain of these London furniture makers. The title is a trifle misleading. The book embraces the work of the famed Gillow Brothers of Lancaster. Robert Gillow, Jr., was the first Gillow to have a shop in London. What is of much importance to American collectors are the data and comments by Sir Ambrose, in respect to Thomas Chippendale. Consider this most pertinent summation: "it is now generally agreed that the publication of the 'Director' gave a prominence to his work beyond that of his contemporaries. No accounts of his with a printed bill head . . . have come to light. He did not issue a trade card. His name does not appear in the Royal Household accounts nor in any of the London Directories." Further, the examples of really documented work by Chippendale pictured would not be recognized as Chippendale by many collectors who still credit Georgian ball and claw and cabriole legged furniture to this maker. It begins to be clear that both Chippendale and Sheraton achieved fame by their books and not by their products. These are facts that should be digested by us as collectors for, in light of what we now know, we must revise our thinking materially about what is—and what isn't — American Chippendale. And American Sheraton! The distinguished Mr. Heal has devoted some thirty years to this book. That it is a labor of love and a compilation not likely to be surpassed in our day is quite obvious after even a hurried perusal. Our concern is largely with the wealth of pictorial material from which we have selected the following: (1) Queen Mary's Writing Table, made by Gerreit Jensen, 1690; (2) a Queen Anne Writing Desk and Book Case, made by John Coxed; (3) a Georgian table by Daniel Wild, 1730; (4) a Georgian card table by Benjamin Crook, 1730; (5) a Clothes press by Thomas Chippendale, 1767 (6) a Pembroke table by Thomas Chippendale, 1769, and (7) a Ladies writing table by Gillows of Lancaster, c. 1780.

It is to be hoped that at least five hundred libraries in the United States will invest in this book for its invaluable reference qualities and its wealth of design as displayed in the trade cards and bills of the furniture makers. In it one finds designs and patterns that seem strangely familiar. These are the prototypes from which many 18th century Colonial and early Federal trade cards were made! If you are a collector of 18th and early 19th century furniture you simply must have this book for your very own. And perhaps, somewhere, somehow, one of our own patient researchers will do a comparable work on the furniture makers of Boston, Albany, Newport, New York, Philadelphia, Lancaster, Baltimore, Annapolis and Charleston. In spite of the many books on antiques, we still need many more. England has enjoyed many great books about her antiques but here is a first—something new—even in that superior atmosphere of publishing.

Top, Example Number Two: the Queen Anne writing desk and book case. Bottom, Example Number Three: a Georgian table by Daniel Wild, with his label.

Example Number Seven: Ladies' writing table by Gillows of Lancaster. The maker's stamp is shown.

Ironstone China, China Classics No. 4;* by Larry Freeman. Century House, 1954. $2.50.

This, indeed, is a handy handbook for the collectors of ironstone, some of whom, amazing though it may sound, aren't aware they are collecting ironstone for they collect it as gaudyware, flow blue, tea leaf lustre, mulberry, or white Wedgwood. In this work Mr. Freeman gives free rein to his subject's scope and tells about it in a natural manner. Whoever told him the flow mulberry and blue effects are due to lithographic transferring was giving the author some wrong information; the flow is due to maculation of the color in the kiln, an effect that would be produced no matter what method of applying it was used. According to the author, decorated ironstone preceded the all white kind in popularity. There is useful information on dating by makers' marks, registry marks, and a long listing of makers with marks that should be helpful to all who now collect this ware. Mention is made of the popularity of ironstone as the dinnerware of ranch-houses. This indeed is quite good practice. All the early ranch-houses, hostels, hotels, and places of entertainment of the far west had either ironstone, or nothing, when they were in their heyday! From Adam to Wedgwood the makers' listing goes, and then on to patterns from A to Z. It is not a pleasure to state the illustrations leave much to be desired; they are pale, fuzzy and inadequate. Textually there is much meat in the little book and it belongs in the working kit of many collectors of this day.

Mastai's Classified Directory of American Art & Antiques Dealers. Mastai Publishing Co., Inc., New York. $10.

About twelve years ago, the first edition of this most complete classified directory made its appearance on the antiques scene. Because it supplied information so vital to the trade, it became, almost overnight, standard equipment for dealers, museums, libraries and collectors. Each new edition has been hailed for its improvements, additions and fuller listings. The Fifth Edition, just off the press (1953-56), is undeniably the most complete yet published. Listings of over 20,000 names, classified geographically, professionally and alphabetically, are thoroughly up-to-date. The section devoted to the Art and Antiques Dealers and kindred trades in the United States, includes such breakdowns as Antiques, Americana, China, Coins, Jewelry, Silver, etc., 47 classifications in all. Looking for a rare book dealer in St. Louis? An auctioneer in Denver? An interior decorator in Dallas? Such specific information Mastai's Directory affords the reader.

Old Gun Collecting

PART II

A Few Definitions

By Martin Rywell

Is a Gun dangerous?

Before proceeding further let us dispose of that bugaboo about a gun being dangerous. The courts have held that an automobile is a dangerous instrument and a glance at any newspaper will confirm it. Yet you may own an automobile and never think of it as a dangerous instrument. It depends on how you handle it. There are cardinal rules of safety. Treat each gun with the respect due a loaded gun. Be sure that it is empty and clear of obstructions. Never point a gun at anyone you do not want to shoot.

What is a Gun?

An elementary but an interesting question is the problem of definitions. Pick up a specialized gun collectors' list and you are puzzled by the terminology and unaware of the distinctions between a pistol, a revolver, a shotgun, a rifle, a carbine and a derringer unless you are an old-timer at sports and/or collecting.

A gun is a device consisting essentially of a straight tube, to propel shot, shell, or bullets by the explosion of gunpowder. In general it is any weapon discharging explosives.

What is a Pistol?

A pistol is a small firearm or handgun with a barrel usually no longer than eight inches that can be aimed and fired while held in one hand. The barrel is the tube of the gun. It is the portion of the gun through which the bullet passes. The function of the barrel is to concentrate the gas generated by the explosion of the powder on the base of the bullet. This concentration of gas in the barrel gives the bullet velocity and the barrel gives the bullet direction.

The pistol was first manufactured in about 1540 in Italy. It was a tube with a small hole. The flash of ignition from the outside of the tube entered and ignited the charge inside the pistol through this small hole or vent.

What is a Revolver?

A revolver is a pistol with a revolving cylinder capable of firing several shots without reloading. A cylinder contains chambers for cartridges. The cylinder revolves around the axis and presents the cartridges successively for discharge.

Samuel Colt patented the first standard revolver in 1835 and this invention made the pistol obsolete. The revolver was used in the Mexican War but owes its recognition to the frontier west of the woodland region. The repeating weapon was needed as the pioneer left the last forest and came into the Great Plains. The Colt was a necessity as protection against hostile Indians or for hunting buffalo.

The revolver is the small arm of most law-enforcement officers.

What is a Shotgun?

A shotgun is a gun for the use of small pellets rather than bullets. The barrel interior is smooth. The shotgun is used to hunt small game and was formerly known as a fowling piece.

The shotgun was evolved from the Blunderbuss. The Blunderbuss was a short musket with a large-sized barrel that ended in a flare or funnel-shaped muzzle. It was loaded from the muzzle with lead balls or stones.

What is a Rifle?

A rifle is a long-barreled firearm with spiral grooves or channels cut in the interior of the barrel to give a spinning motion to the bullet and thereby increase the accuracy and the distance.

The rifle was invented in the 15th century but its practical and widespread use came with the settling of the woodland regions of what is now Eastern United States.

The sequence of firearm development followed a change of necessity. The exigencies of environment developed the firearm. The primitive wilderness meant hunting for food and also protection against animals and Indians.

The colonists in the early 1720's constructed the rifle in what is now Lancaster county. This weapon, called the Kentucky rifle, evolved as an adaptation for frontier conditions. It was the pioneer's defense against Indians and also the means of providing him with meat and skins. Its merits as a weapon were its long range and its accuracy. Its outstanding defect was the time and difficulty involved in reloading through the muzzle or the open end of the barrel. The disadvantage was even greater when the pioneer was mounted on a horse and was not a match against the Indian's bow and arrows. Marksmanship became vitally important.

What is a Carbine?

A carbine is a short-barreled rifle designed for mounted men.

What is a Musketoon?

A musketoon is a short musket designed to be used by the cavalry.

What is a Musket?

A musket is a long-arm with a smooth barrel interior.

The term "musket" was often used to describe military shoulder weapons generally, since the musket was the infantry firearm in use before the introduction of the rifle.

What is a Derringer?

The Derringer is a compact single-shot pocket pistol of heavy caliber that was very popular in California during the days of the Gold Rush and was used for self-defense.

Henry Deringer, the inventor, is the only American gunmaker whose name became part of our language though he never procured a patent for his firearm. He was one of the first gunmakers in the United States to employ the percussion system (about 1830). He spelled his name with one "r" but imitators to avoid litigation used two "r"s. The assassination of President Lincoln with the derringer as the murder weapon helped the acceptance of the derringer name as a common noun.

The derringer was made with a small barrel usually three inches, of 41 caliber, with a wood stock decorated with German silver inlays. Its phenomenal popularity was because of the ease with which it could be concealed and it became associated with Western-bound travelers, riverboat captains, miners, prospectors and gamblers.

What is a Pepperbox?

The pepperbox was a revolving percussion weapon that had a number of parallel barrels turning about a central axis for firing in succession by a fixed hammer. The difference between a revolver and a pepperbox is that in a revolver all shots pass through a single barrel and a pepperbox has a separate barrel for each shot.

The pepperbox was patented in 1836 by Benjamin and Barton Darling and became very popular. It was made in 3, 4, 5, and 6 barrels and was fired by a bar hammer. Pepperboxes were manufactured by Allen & Thurber, Blunt & Syms, Robbins & Lawrence, Manhattan Firearms Company, Darling and a few others.

What are Long-Arms?

Long-arms are long-barreled firearms such as shotguns, rifles, muskets, carbines and musketoons.

What are Short-Arms?

Short-arms are pistols, revolvers, pepperboxes, derringers and all short-barreled firearms.

What are Small-Arms?

Small-arms is a military term for portable arms such as rifles, carbines, shotguns, pistols and revolvers.

Now that we have familiarized ourselves with these primary definitions and understand the differences between the various firearms we will cover important concepts in the next article.

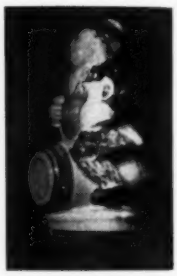
Stop at the Shops

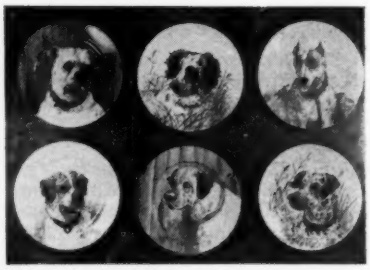
Stop at the Shops takes you each month, on a little tour into antiques shops throughout the nation. Shown, in most instances, is merchandise representative of that which is for sale on today's market, or as the case may be services that have proven to be of particular value to antiquarians. Selections for this feature are made by Spinning Wheel as a reader service and details of description and authenticity are accepted from individual owners as being accurate.

Windsor chairs were a New England development of the Philadelphia chair made first in that city circa 1725 as an adaptation of a solid plank seat, spindle back chair of English provincial origin. So popular did the New England Windsor become that many craftsmen made nothing else. Most likely, makers of Windsors served their apprenticeship as makers of early flax wheels, as the legs of the little spinning wheels and their spoke turnings are very similar to the work on so-called "stick" furniture. The chair shown is of Connecticut Valley origin, an 18th century piece from the vicinity of Ashfield, Mass. It bears the signature of A. Haggart. ($45.) From Rooster Hill Antiques, Westfield, Mass.

Prattware with its raised figural or other decoration, is vividly colored in tones of orange, blue, purple, green and black. Felix Pratt operated at Little Fenton, England, from 1770's into the early 1800's. The pottery snuff bottle shown is c. 1790, 4" high, with underglaze colors of blue, green and ochre. A plug in the base unscrews. It is inscribed "T.C." presumably the initials of the owner. Pratt figures of this period are quite rare. This particular piece not for sale. From David Clark, Great Ayton, Middlesbrough, England.

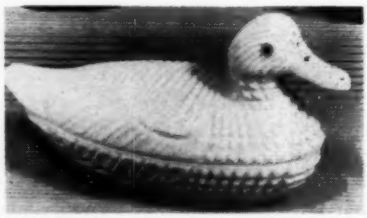


Belter Furniture is the work of John Belter, New York City cabinetmaker who produced much Louis XV revival-style furniture in sets from the 1840's. His name, originally Beltier, is sometimes so spelled in early references. The carving on his elaborate pieces which graced the drawing rooms of the Victorian wealthy, was all hand done. Chair shown, (one of a three piece set including matching chair and sofa- of the 1840-1850 period. ($500. the 3 pieces). From Thomas Antiques Shop, Carrollton, Ohio.



Dog Head Plates. These were hand painted in a signed series of 12 by G. Pedersen, a Dane, who worked in this country about 50 years ago. China blanks most frequently used were the 10" size from Cauldon, England. Each plate is numbered, the breed of dog and plate number always corresponding. For instance, #1 is always a Columbo Spaniel. #12, a Dalmation. Among other breeds represented are the English Bull, Pit Bull, Newfoundland, St. Bernard, etc. The plates shown are from the personal collection of Neil T. Moor, Cambridge, Mass.

Waterford the rich glass of Ireland, was being sent to American ports as early as 1786, with imports increasing until around 1822, when the trade began to fall off. In 1851, the Waterford works closed after a continuous operation since 1783. Glassmaking had begun at Waterford even earlier, but the factory which had started in 1729 had closed in 1740 for a lapse of 43 years, till 1783. Cut Glass was the chief product though glass was made for every possible use. The Waterford Cut Glass bowl shown, circa 1800, is clear lead glass, 12" long, 6½" wide, and 6½" high at ends. ($60.) From Lois W. Spring, Scituate Centre, Mass.



Atterbury Ducks most sought for of fowl dishes, follow the exact design of Patent #17192, issued to T. B. Atterbury of Pittsburgh, Penna. on March 15, 1887, and were produced by the Atterbury Company of Pittsburgh. Outstanding examples of the 1880 glassmaker's art, they came in various colors and combinations: white, blue, amethyst, white with amethyst head, white with blue head, etc. The example pictured is in the popular white Milk Glass. From Dr. Maude R. Bell, Lincoln, Nebraska.

The Franklin Stove a ventilating cast iron fireplace was invented by Benjamin Franklin, pursuing the principle of the "mechanical fire" of Sieur Ganger, first advocated in France around 1710. Franklin never patented his invention, but left it to others to make fortunes from its production. The Franklin fireplace illustrated shows beautifully detailed embossed facings in grape and bird design. ($100.) From Blanche E. Watson, Geneva, Illinois.

The Deep Red Garnet the January birthstone, signifying constancy, is said to have been used by Noah to light the Ark, such is its smouldering fire. Mined in Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and North and South America, this stone has been popular through the ages on all continents. Finer garnets are facet or rose cut, as are diamonds. The piece shown is a Bohemian garnet, usually mined near Teplitz in what has been recently known as Czecho-Slovakia. From Stella L. Shreve, Springfield, Missouri.

M. & S. Superior dolls are, in spite of research by doll authorities, still a mystery as far as maker is concerned. No patent or trademark for them is registered with the U. S. patent office, and it is possible they are of English origin. They apparently date from about the 1860's, with a uniform type body, quite probably commercially made, with leather arms and shoes made on the feet. They came blonde or brunette, from 20 to 30" tall, with Civil War style hairdo, painted eyes always. Frequently the label M.&S. Superior and the size number is still intact. The Superior shown is a blonde. ($85.) From Tanner's Antiques, Houston, Texas.

Children's Books
by the Catnach Press

COLLECTORS are sometimes astonished at the values associated with certain Children's Books. And, not so curiously, the little books that were originally just penny items are the ones apparently the rarest today. Practically all of them were thumbed out of existence by the original little ones who owned them. Thus, surviving examples are rare, if not rich, and command a very pretty penny indeed. One of the really famous English printers of cheap little books for Children was the firm of J. (John & James, Father & Son) Catnach, which flourished from 1769 to 1841. All collectors of rare books are familiar with the term "Catnach" for, from this press came innumerable ballads, song sheets, carols, broadsides, penny dreadfuls, and books for the amusement, entertainment and education of children. The Catnach Press enjoyed several locations; it was at Berwick-upon-Tweed, at Alnwick, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and at the sign of the Seven Dials, London. Some idea of the size or volume of its production may be gathered from its output of "Gallows Literature" mean broadsides of trials, confessions and executions of malefactors. Catnach printed 10,000,000 copies of sheets dealing with just seven murders! That a printer who specialized on such literature should also be famed for his Children's Books should not be a surprise. Catnach was a printer of popular stuff; of anything that could be sold by street hawkers, barrowmen, and cheap stationers. And in this category were also the cheap books for children.

Here are some of the rare popular titles of children's books from the Catnach Press: Nurse Love-Child's Legacy, The Golden Pippin, Jerry Diddle and his Fiddle, Jumping Joan, This Milkmaid, The Butterfly's Ball, The Easter Gift, (an ABC Book), The Tragical Death of an Apple Pie, Mother Hubbard and Her Wonderful Dog, The Royal Book of Nursery Rhymes, The Good Child's Illustrated Alphabet, and The Life and Adventures of Dick Turpin.

From around 1815, many Catnach press Children's Books appear to have been imported by our own seacoast city stationers. These imports, while selling readily, were also an inspiration to many American publishers who, in a short time, were publishing their own versions, not only of children's books, but also of broadsides and dreadfuls. From thence onward, our own history provided even more lurid inspiration than the murders of London. We had murders of our own, but of more interest, we had Indian Captivities, and frontier experiences, and print them we did.

Thus, thanks to the Catnach Press we have some originals from that press, and innumerable bits and pieces of ephemeral literature after the manner of Catnach. — Everard Charles.

Business Americana Sale

and the Prices Realized

WE have finally received the priced sale record of The Swann Auction Gallery of New York, covering the dispersal of Business and Pictorial Americana, October 15, 1953. If ever a sale disclosed the importance, and the value, of the type and kind of things so carefully listed in the book "Treasures in Truck & Trash" this is it. Actually, we suspect, this is the first extensive auction of such material; the bellwether auction, so to speak. Consequently the following prices are important.

Advertising Posters: Pairs, for beverages, c. 1850, $10; 3, for skates, rubber wheels, etc., $8; 6, of beer, cigars, candy, etc., $11; 1, of la Mountain Balloon ascension, Carthage, Ill., 1860, $20.

Catalogs of Merchandise: Pierce Arrow Motor Car (4 catalogs) $15; Waverly Electric Car, $8; Carriage Parts, 14 pages, $25 (dated 1805); Cigar Box Labels (a collection of 1000, mounted) $130; Needles (display piece) $5; Pleasure Railway at Hoboken, 1840, $11; Ironwork, 1840, $17; Drawing materials, $2; Hardware, 1894, $6; Premiums, American Agriculturist, 1879, $7; Nashua Lock Co., and Sargent Hardware Co., (2) $8; Five pieces, all catalogs of ironwork, $10; Mail Order, White, Van Glahn & Co., 4 pieces, 1905-1909, $27.50; Sears Roebuck (3) and Montgomery Ward, (3), the six, $30; Chickering Pianos, School Furniture, Chemical Apparatus, 5 pieces, $5; Five Wholesale Jewelry catalogs, $6; McAllister Scientific Apparatus, Telephone Supplies, Photo supplies (3 pieces) $10; Meriden Britannia and Silver Plate Co., bad condition, $4; Ten catalogs of ceramics and glassware, 1890 to 1904, $10; 25 catalogs of house furnishings, upholstery, fabrics, etcetera, $25; Westervelt Weathervanes, $15; Groceries, 10 pieces, $10.

Here is evidence that trade catalogs of almost any kind, dating as late as 1910, are worth at least $1 each. Ten years ago they were considered by some, just old paper. But here is evidence, too, that other catalogs, earlier, or about objects collected, are worth from $5 to $15 each and more. And these were just junk ten years ago. We believe a limited number of priced catalogs of this sale can be had from the Swann Gallery, 146 East 56th Street, New York 22, N. Y. at the price of $2 each.

We were gratified to learn that one of the bidders at this sale was a representative of a Textile Designing Organization. This delightful avocation of collecting has spread into every nook and corner of the commercial and industrial world!

Wives of Our Presidents on Royal Berlin Plates

DISPERSED at public auction on the afternoon of October 10, 1953, these plates constitute what is believed to be the only complete set in existence, portraying the wives of U. S. Presidents from Washington through to Woodrow Wilson — with but one exception. The exception, of course, is that one plates carries the portrait of Harriet Lane, niece, and hostess at the White House during the administration of the bachelor President, James Buchanan. They are of Royal Berlin Porcelain, the portraits painted superbly by S. Wagner, celebrated ceramic portraitist of Berlin and Vienna. Happily we can show six of the plates. Each portrait dominates the center of the plate. Each plate is 10½ inches in diameter. The rims are decorated in gold and colors with the American eagle at the top, a pair of flags at each side and a panel with name of the Lady under the portrait.

Important as these portraits are, as works of art, and as memorials of the First Ladies—and in spite of the comment made by one admirer at the Parke-Bernet Galleries "I'd like to have known Mrs. James Monroe . . . what a beauty she was"—we should keep in mind that White House antiques have indeed been kicked around and none knows where many of the old pieces reside today — or if they survive. The unpleasantness of 1812 when the British burned our cherished Washington buildings left Dolly Madison in a dither. The refurnishing that then occurred evidently furnished the house until the Van Buren administration when much new glass, china, draperies and furniture was purchased. All the information about refurnishing is given in the congressional committee's report but, of what happened to the things removed, we have found no word . . . not a trace!

record, being granted by "Etats Generaux" in 1657 for the application of the pendulum to clocks. But now and then a scientist or historian will come along to question this belief in light of certain papers concerning Jost Burgi (1552-1632). The results of one such questioning, given in the Dec. '53 issue of The Horological Journal, make fascinating, if technical, reading. The pictures and graphs supporting Burgi as possible inventor, are out-of-this-world — and the actual size photograph of a Burgi rock crystal clock, its three dials (for hours, minutes and seconds) and its revolving celestial globe under the hemispherical top of the case, is enough to start any serious clock student saving for a trip to Vienna, where this example of Burgi's work is housed in the Kunsthistorisches Museum. If it seems simpler to buy the magazine, the address is 226 Latymer Court, Hammersmith, London W. 6. It's $2 per year subscription.

CONCERNING WHO SHOULD KNOW WHAT: Mrs. Rose Ball, Suld's Antiques, wrote us after reading Who Should Know What (Jan. '54): "For my part, there isn't enough that can be passed on to collectors and purchasers of antiques in the way of facts pertaining to their acquisitions; research and study should be endless pursuits for anyone who hopes to sell antiques at a profit to the purchaser who wants to acquire worthwhile pieces. Knowing the source of supply, too, seems to heighten interest and pleasure in possession. However, I have heard a few reverberations on the subject of printing exact prices of specific articles bought at auctions. To cite one instance: a dealer who had bought extensively at a widely publicized auction actually had a customer (who had read an article quoting prices obtained at the auction) tell her that "she certainly wanted quite a profit on her things!" If prices could be referred to in a general way, rather than each item and price specifically, the public could be kept informed of current values, yet the antiques dealer (who in the very process of taking care of his obligations to the public rightly expects to make a decent profit on his investment) would be protected."

PAPERWEIGHT COLLECTORS: Since the Paperweight Collectors Association was mentioned in the December 1953 issue of The Spinning Wheel, we've had several requests for more information about this society. The address is 55 West 42nd St., New York City, and Mr. Paul Jokelson is the President. He tells us the association is always happy to hear from clubs or other groups studying antiques, as well as individuals—so that those interested may be informed of Association activities.

PRESENT DAY CUT GLASS: There can't be "reproductions" of Cut Glass, says Mr. Iorio of The Glass Shop in Flemington, N. J. because the making of cut glass has never stopped. Though it's been "out of style" for a while, and the 750 or so cut glass manufactories this country boasted at the turn of the century have dwindled to a handful, the methods of cutting are still the same—there just isn't any other way. Mr. Iorio, like his father before him, has been designing and cutting glass all his life. At the age of nine, he had originated the Iorio Pinwheel design which was marketed worldwide. If you visit The Glass House, skip through the contemporary glass sales room and head directly for the back room where the cut glass is displayed. Some of the pieces are for sale. Others, like the two pieces of colored cut glass, are for exhibition purposes only— they were experimental pieces. Mr. Iorio's work is fine in design, heavy and brilliant. Trays, bowls, goblets and wines are available to to private buyers—no dealers. (This ware can't be produced in quantity.) Mr. Iorio thinks it's sad, and so do we, that this art is dying out. "But who can afford to learn glass cutting nowadays?" he shrugs. "Some pieces take as much as 300 hours of experienced work—and millionaires just aren't buying cut glass."

WINTER BUSINESS: "Hurray for mail order in weather like this", writes Mrs. Violet Lowe of Cherryville Antiques, no further north than Flemington, N. J. "We're buried in 13 inches of snow . . nice to have something in that mailbox! Our Jim-the-mailman noticed the orders coming in, came in himself and bought a blanket chest to refinish!" Who says the Postal Department is not cooperative?

only preserves every contour of its curvaceous period, but the upholstery is suitably embellished with birds and flowers, and the wood adorned with actual ormolu trim.

A sampling of collector's items in miniature is more striking than even these practical notions. Every house must have a sofa (though not necessarily French Empire!), but it may be lacking a blue pottery mold equipped to turn out half a dozen puddings the size of thumb tacks. One of our doll kitchens contains this little gem, as well as a tea-set of a delicate thistle pattern with octagonal cups. We have seen (but, alas, do not own) such collector's items as framed miniature lithophanes and a set of Blue Onion Meissen kitchen utensils and canisters. The most improbable miniatures have a way of turning up. An unlikely item we recently acquired is, of all things, that late-Victorian fancy, a landscape carved in cork, in an ornate metal frame.

But perhaps the final word on what might be expected to appear in miniature came to us not long ago, the gift of an elderly English-woman who said that it was dug up in Surrey. This, if you please, is a small, plain, Victorian, wooden coffin.

These are just a few highlights of a personal and relatively modest collection, most of it scaled one inch to the foot. Multiplied by the numerous collectors who have turned to this wonderfully diversified field, the total, as one might suppose, encompasses, as much as any area of antiques collecting can, a thorough study of domestic history.

Scientific Lamps

HERE we can deal with two antiques of the future which, most likely, can be purchased today—if found, that is—for less money than they cost when new, back in 1870. The first of these "lamps," the one at the top of the page, had a magnificently high sounding name, The Stellar Tellurian. The lamp is in the center and, we suspect, its light-giving quality was limited to the instrument. It is, of course, a Clarke-type "Fairy" lamp. It could be used to solve at least seventy theorems or problems of astronomy, right on the table, as the candle burned. The price, for an 18 inch diameter Tellurian was $75; the 36 inch, or college size, was priced at $115. The crank at the side of the machine caused Mother Earth to move around the lamp, the sun.

Far simpler was Dr. Clarke's "Astronomical Lantern" (below). Of japanned tin, it had a ground glass front and lamp within. Semi-transparent cards with the various constellations were inserted, showing the magnitudes. The price in 1870—$5.50. Dr. Clarke said of his lantern, that it was "a new way to see the stars."

There are places in the home where one could display objects such as these to advantage. They are exactly the type and kind of antiques that school teachers, college professors, astronomers and mathematicians should—or could—collect. For such people, this would be Purposeful Collecting. A firm, or individual, interested in the production of scientific instruments or school supplies might well collect them.

How Others Use Their Antiques

1,000 Lamps On Display

LAMPS have always held a fascination for Mrs. Charlie S. Williams of Lubbock, Texas. Her first pot-bellied little "Handy" was purchased with five carefully hoarded nickels when she was less than six years old. But only after her own daughter, Mollie, discovered "Handy" and begged for one like it, did the search for lamps begin in earnest. Now it would be hard to find a type of lamp not included in the Williams' collection of over 1,000. Many have historical as well as sentimental association, like the large clear glass Roman Key lamps with matching chimneys once owned by Brigham Young.

Mrs. Williams uses as many lamps as possible, retaining the old chimneys and shades and electrifying in such careful manner that any lamp can be restored to its original kerosene or whale oil. But one cannot use 1,000 lamps, and Mrs. Williams has planned carefully for their display. A whatnot shelf in an awkward jog between living room and hall, holds miniature lamps. Shelves above the windows of her large den, pictured, display her jewels in all colors, shapes and sizes, creating a mural of unusual interest.

Perhaps her most charming display, if one can make any choice, is that arranged in her greenhouse. During some rebuilding, the lamps were placed there merely for convenience, but under the spell of the strong Texas sunlight, the lamps took on such added beauty and brilliance, many absorbing an amethyst tint, that the greenhouse became their permanent setting. We are indebted to Mrs. H. G. Knight of Lubbock, for the story of this fine collection, so beautifully displayed.
